Quick Overview

The First Four Sections (How do I approach beliefs?)

1. Why should I care?

Before you spend any time or effort on beliefs, or this website, you have to realize it will pay off better than investing your time in other areas of life.

This section shows: no other choice you will make will have as wide, deep and lasting impacts as the beliefs you choose to stand on.

2. Okay I care, but how can I know the truth?

Once realizing the significance of beliefs, many still get overwhelmed wondering if there is truth, and how can I possibly know.

This section demonstrates truth, or the reality of our world, can be known using the same simple and common approach we have used naturally since we were children.

3. Okay if truth can be known, where is the evidence?

If there is truth to be known, then you have to be aware of the evidence available. Many are not.

There are many ways you can start looking deeper into beliefs, this section explains a particularly good method. The reason this approach is useful: (a) it's simple, only two options possible for half the choices you have to make before you are standing on firm beliefs, (b) and the evidence is already in. Your brain will literally grow as you add amazing information to think about and support your choice.

4. You made your bet

You are currently standing on, and dependent upon the accuracy of, a worldview belief.

Compare and make your choice. You do this for shoes, cars, jobs, potential mates, and anything else you will commit to. So, this section organizes and compares different belief systems, so whatever worldview you choose to stand on, the decision will be well-informed.

Frequently Asked Questions (FAQs)

We all have interesting questions, lingering questions, and things we just need to know.

This section provides the common questions people bring up concerning the big questions in life. Answers are given (1) in a brief answer, if you just want to respond to someone and stimulate further thought, (2) in more detailed answers for those who seek thorough coverage of the topic, and (3) eventually in multi-media formats as people learn best from diverse methods (media will be added as time goes on as more presentations and activities are recorded).

Last, and maybe most importantly, there is the ability to send your questions in, which may take time to get to, but will be continuously added to provide help in any area of interest or need.

The Rest of the Website

1. Bring Us In

Let us know how a Thoughtful Beliefs speaker or program could benefit your university campus, church or creative venue. Examples have included full interactive programs, teaching, discussion/debates, "skeptics nights", conferences, radio, TV, with age ranges from middle school through adult and from small to very large audiences.

2. Blogs

Feeding your mind consistently is important in many ways, and the blogs are set up to provide regular information, which you can also choose to have sent to you once a week, to stimulate your mind.

Why do this? You will regularly put into your brain interesting and impressive knowledge. We can talk about galaxies & atoms, kangaroo babies & the music group, evolution & Star Wars (or The Notebook for our female readers), the Bible & The Da Vinci Code, Ice Cube and you, Jesus & Hinduism & surviving a fall from 10,000 feet without a parachute, and other amazing things in this life.

You can use this information to help in your choice of beliefs, and as a side-benefit of this program – your brain will literally grow – new connections will actually be made within your brain as you take in information new to you. While it is unfortunate so much of this information has not been taught, or not taught well, the good thing is you will now add impressive and interesting conversation pieces in many areas.

3. Calendar of Events

In case you want to schedule a speaker, or check if there is an activity occurring in your area, you can click on the event and the details will be given.

4. As much other diverse stuff we can cram-in to allow you to interact in a way most helpful to you.
